Orthodox medicine verses the new medicine

Orthodox medicine is not a truly independent science. Rather it operates using other sciences such as chemistry, physics and to a small extent biology. Orthodox medicine is encumbered with countless hypotheses and dogmas. In contrast to the new medicine it doesn't know a single cause of even just one illness. The so-called 'science' of orthodox medicine is restricted purely to a description of the illness – and this is often pompous and unintelligible to the mere mortal. Its science consists of a bundle of facts lacking any noticeable relationship to one another. This mass of facts has, up to the present time, been used to engulf unwitting, frightened patients. Such patients are then, without any knowledge of the cause of the illness, also mostly recommended one of a number of mechanistic, combative, symptom eliminating 'therapies'. The resulting cutting-away, irradiating, burning, closing up, pacifying, or the strengthening of a postulated 'immune-system', etc, are often and generously used.

The there with associated damage and resultant treatment rituals are more often than not the triggers for successive conflicts, such as a fear of death (which always leads to cancer of the alveolus), and a severe collapse of self-worth (this always leads to bone cancer, and in the repair stage to leukaemia!) etc.

In contrast to this the five natural laws of the new medicine turn medicine itself into a true science, without having to endeavour to make up one single hypothesis. Instead it sets up a universally valid biology and pathology for all life forms, and intelligibly arranges an overwhelming quantity of until now isolated facts.

A Truth can only become a reality when the recipient is ready for it. (Christian Morgenstern)

It is seldom that a far-reaching discovery doesn't encounter controversy and emotionally charged reactions. Dr Ryke Geerd Hamer's 'New Medicine' is no exception. Opinions could not differ more over his discovery of the five natural laws governing the course of all psychosomatic illnesses found in human, animal and analogously even in plant life. Those who have really understood the 'New Medicine' are for the most part full of enthusiasm for it. They count themselves fortunate to have lost their fear of illnesses, such as cancer, thought previously to be incurable or life threatening. The others who have never heard or understood anything about the 'new medicine' turn away in disbelief or issue disparaging, even jealous or hateful statements, directed at Dr. Hamer's person and discoveries.

Written as far as possible in layman's terms, the following article portrays the fundamental principles of Dr. Hamer's successful discovery and finds them both rigorous and hermetically coherent.

The logically compelling consequence of his work is the definitive end of chemotherapy, radiotherapy, radical operations, psychiatric drugs, and the vast majority of medicines. All these treatment methods emerge as highly damaging, even to the extent of accelerating the patient's death. Due to the lethal effects of its long-term use morphine will have to be used far more selectively and sparsely.

Even such common and widely available things such as tissue extraction, lumbar puncture, the removal of amniotic fluid, and foetal ultrasound are revealed to be dangerous operations.

After over one hundred years of physics and chemistry acting as the driving force of orthodox medicine, and thereby viewing human and animal as a quasi clockwork mechanism, with certainty, biology will increasingly become the decisive element of the new century. In the process, from time to time, much established wisdom will be turned on its head, leading to conclusions, which are not only unexpected, but fundamentally shock our once trusted understanding. Dr. Hamer's 'New Medicine', with its five laws of nature, will be the decisive guiding factor of modern medical science. It will form the building blocks of a new vision of a wiser society freed from fear.

The 'New Medicine' is a diagnostic system rather than an actual therapeutic method. However, without it being brought into consideration and informing the treatment, every therapy amounts to a blind stab in the dark. For the first time in medical history it has become possible for every intelligent person to grasp a truly intelligible system, detailing the exact causes, progression and healing of every illness of human, animal and plant.

Without the application- either conscious or otherwise - of the principles of the 'New Medicine' a true healing is not possible.

How was the 'New Medicine' discovered?

In December 1978, after countless operations, Dirk Hamer's son died from a bullet wound. He was shot in a fit of rage by the Italian Prince, Vittorio Emanuele of Savoy. Immediately following his death his father developed testicular cancer. Dr Hamer felt instinctively that his illness must be connected with his son's death, as he had never been seriously ill before then. Later as a consultant in a clinic he personally questioned and examined two hundred cancer patients. To his amazement he established that every one of them had experienced a traumatic event that preceded their illness. By this means he came to recognise types of psychological-biological conflict, resulting in the respective illness of a particular organ. Thus, he established that the vast majority of testicular cancers and ovarian cysts are preceded by a 'loss-conflict' brought about through the death or departure of a beloved person or animal. The cause of breast cancer in the one breast is either a so called 'mother-child-concern-, quarrel- or separation conflict,' or, in the other breast, a 'partner-concern-, quarrel or separation conflict.'

Since then, thanks to intuition, his untiring thirst for knowledge, and laborious work, mostly as a lone individual, the founder of the 'New Medicine' has published a scientific table in three colours depicting the disease-causing biological conflicts (see literature/book list). Next to the specific areas of conflict that lead to a disease the table also contains the location of the 'Hamer's lesion' in the brain and describes the sympathetic and parasympathetic nervous and vegetative phenomena that accompany it.

Biological conflicts and their specific illnesses (a selection)

Cancer of the alveoli or lung tumours: Fear of death conflict; for example, shock from a brutal medical diagnosis, severe accident, etc. A single tumour can also arise if one fears for the life of another person.

Bronchial cancer: territorial conflict, for example; an adversary threatens to overrun one's territory, or the danger exists that something will be stolen from one's territory; fear of losing one's job, wife/husband, house, etc.

Paralysis and multiple sclerosis: A conflict arising from not being able to escape, or keep up, hold on to, get out of the way, or being in a catch twenty two situation.

Facial paralysis: conflict of losing face; being made a fool of.

Stomach cancer: (apart from the small curvature): I am not able to stomach it; conflict concerning inability to digest chunks of life; indigestible annoyance.

Bone cancer: breakdown of self-esteem (the healing of this necessarily occurs through the manifestation of leukaemia!)

Heart attack: territorial conflict; fight for territory or its contents.

Psoriasis: Separation conflict, tearing away of bodily contact; loss of contact to Mother, Father, the flock, family, friends, beloved animals.

The golden rule of cancer

The first of the new medicine's five natural laws is: every disease originates with a DHS (Dirk-Hamer-Syndrome) i.e., a most severe, highly acute, dramatic and isolated conflict experienced as a shock, which strikes at the same time, on all three different levels of existence- psyche (as an obsessive thought pattern) – brain (Hamer's lesion and brain oedema) – organ (organ manifestation, through impairment or failure).

Dr Hamer named the conflict that acts as the trigger for all illnesses, as the Dirk-Hamer-Syndrome, after his deceased son. In the mean time the DHS has become the corner stone of this medicine, as without the resolution of the psychological/biological conflict there can be no definitive healing. The DHS has one very important characteristic that always needs to be taken into consideration. A conflict only becomes a DHS (a disease trigger) if it catches someone off guard. A DHS is always an unexpected, isolated experience, perceived as a lightning strike and a terrible blow, both dramatic, violent and extremely painful. Typical expressions are, "I couldn't believe my ears," "I was paralysed with shock", "I lost all understanding”, “I was beside myself with anger”, “I felt utterly alone”, and “I fell into a bottomless pit”.

If, for example, a mother sees her child ran over, or watches as he falls from a tree, or they have a violent argument, these all count as a mother-child-conflict. In a right-handed mother this leads to cancer of the breast adenoids in the left breast, with an increase in mammary gland cells. The same conflict for the left handed mother results in cancerous growth in the right breast<sup>1</sup>

If, however the mother has the feeling that she has to separate or is going to be separated from her child, the milk ducts are affected.

The other breast develops an illness whenever there is a conflict with the person she thinks of as her partner rather than her child or mother. This is known as a partner-care-conflict or separation conflict, and could be about her boyfriend, husband, colleague, training partner, etc.

The Dirk Hamer Syndrome – DHS –

The key element of an entire illness, the DHS, can be described as a trauma, shock or upheaval. It is a severe, highly acute, dramatic and isolated experience of conflict that takes the person completely by surprise. Its main characteristics are:

- It originates as an utterly unexpected biological shock, quasi from one second to the next.
- It fixes the location of Hamer’s lesion (HH) in the brain.
- It fixes the location of the (cancer-) illness, that is to say the functional disturbance to the organ.
- It lays the, so-called, “associative-tracks”, which, by association can always remind the individual of her conflict.

For example, a Swiss man has been married to an Indian lady for many years. During lunch, consisting of a spicy Indian dish, she unexpectedly revealed that she was leaving him forthwith to go and live with a man he already knew. From that moment on the spices, which he had been able to digest easily, caused severe stomach pains and diarrhoea. He always had to meticulously avoid the DHS associated herbs. Furthermore the sight or even just the name of his rival caused heart pain, which is indicative of a territorial conflict.

At the moment of a DHS the individual is aware of the smallest details – just as if taking a flash photograph – colours, shapes, sounds, smells, temperature, humidity, drafts, direction of the wind, light conditions, etc. – in summery, everything that is present at the moment of the DHS.

These associations are, as it were, programmed in for life, and serve the individual as a form of warning signal. A fish that is once painfully bitten in murky waters will take care not to swim in such waters unless in an emergency. For the fish murky water signifies “a bite in the tail.”

The discovery of this pattern is fundamentally important. Thus, a mother who is terribly anxious about her child, because he is injured, a drug addict, or in financial difficulty or ill health, can develop an adenoid, i.e. mammary gland cancer, in her left breast. The mammary gland cells multiply in order to provide greater milk production in order to physically help the child. This ancient programme has always been present in every mammalian organism. It serves the eternal survival urge and the preservation of the species.

Diagram no 1 shows the progression of the two phases of an illness provided that the conflict is resolved. The DHS, the trauma that triggers the illness, is the beginning of every illness. The phase of active conflict (between DHS and conflict resolution, in future CL) is characterised by psychological-biological stress: the individual constantly thinks about the conflict, sleeps badly or not at all, loses weight, has no appetite, and has cold hands and feet.

The conflict resolution (CL) stands at the beginning of every healing- or repair phase. This stage is recognised by psychological wellbeing (the conflict is resolved), great tiredness, heat, hunger, weight gain, warm hands and feet, perhaps a high temperature, suppurating or bleeding discharge, and many other symptoms. Double vision, headaches, vomiting and tuberculosis often accompany the other symptoms and have been programmed into the body by Mother Nature right from the beginning.

At the end of the vagotonia (parasympathetic phase) the organism passes back into the normal “day-night rhythm” again. All of these phases of healing are generally diagnosed as being separate “illnesses” and correspondingly attempts are made to heal or suppress them.

The conflict resolution (CL)

It can only come to this stage if the illness-triggering conflict-shock, the DHS, is resolved in real terms, also that the associative-tracks left by the conflict do not allow it to flare up again through association. Should this arise one speaks in such cases of allergies.

With the resolution of the conflict the compulsive or problem thoughts appear to evaporate at the psychological level. In the brain connective tissue is laid down in increasing amounts. Scar tissue is thus formed in the area of Hamer’s lesion, in order that brain activity is restored as well as possible. At the organic level repairs begin to restore function to the affected organ. Without a definitive resolution of the conflict and avoidance of the corresponding mental associative-tracks the illness will continue to exist.

Every illness begins in the brain

Every self-created illness begins in the brain. One can claim with justification that the brain is the central computer of the entire organism. The DHS leads to the formation of a so-called Hamer’s lesion within the brain in a highly specific place corresponding to each and every conflict and organ. This can be viewed with a CT scan.

Using a CT scan a practised doctor or therapist can name the area of conflict and the organ affected from the position of one of Hamer’s zones. In orthodox medicine Hamer’s lesions are often diagnosed as “brain tumours” or “brain metastasis” and in part, totally without foundation, irradiated, surgically removed or set on with chemotherapy.

Diagram no 2 shows the duel phase pattern with three boxes marked (1) and three marked (2). (1) Depicts the organs directed by the cerebrum, (2) those directed by the old brain (old brain = brain stem and cerebellum). It is easy to see that all the organs directed by the old brain create cell multiplication or a tumour in the sympathetic phase. After the CL, conflict resolution, the tumour is broken down by the organ, as long as no antibiotics or chemotherapy are administered.

The organs directed by the cerebrum (cerebrum = cerebral medulla and cerebral cortex) do exactly the opposite. At first cell atrophy, necrosis or organ failure takes place, thereafter, tissue regeneration, and restoration of function. (For example, in diabetes, motor dysfunction, and acute hearing loss, etc.)

The conclusion to be drawn is that every illness is a meaningful biological programme specially made by nature.

This law turns the previously valid understanding of illness into its polar opposite. Illness is no longer nature's mistake, which has to be corrected or repaired with all possible means. Rather it is, as stated, Nature's sensible specifically created programme.

The universal dynamic governing all life forms is the eternal survival instinct.

We all want to survive, and the "illness" is an important aid in our overcoming an obstacle or difficulty. The "illness" is a form of second chance to deal with a psychological-biological conflict, an opportunity to stay on top through an additional effort, or sooner or later... to die and make space for something new.

Microbes; optimising the healing process

The viruses, bacteria, myco-bacteria and fungi are not our enemies or agents of disease. Rather they act as symbiotic healing agents. They carry out their work exclusively at the command of the host's brain after the successful resolution of a conflict. From Louis Pasteur to the present day orthodox medicine has viewed microbes as pests, and portrayed them as dangerous enemy army that needs eradicating. This is absurd. We have lived in a symbiosis with microbes since the beginning of time, and without them would not have been able to develop into what we are today. In his re-released comprehensive book, "The legacy of a new medicine", Dr Hamer writes on page 402, volume 1: "La medicina sagrada" reveals to us a new, cosmic, one could say divine, dimension. Suddenly every elephant, bug, bird, even the dolphins, are as equally included in our medical thoughts and feelings as every microbe, every plant, and every tree. Indeed, to think otherwise than as a cosmic being is not even possible anymore.

Due to our myco-phobia and excessive use of antibiotics we have brought things so far that there is no proper cleansing anymore. In doing so we have created a situation that all old-brain directed tumours can no longer be properly broken down during vagotonia. To put it simply, fungi, myco-bacteria and bacteria help to break down the old-brain governed tumour through a process akin to fermentation, during the vagotonic change to the vegetative equilibrium, while the viruses and bacteria rebuild with surplus where tissue necrosis and ulceration has occurred.

Summary

Every “illness” begins with a DHS, i.e., with a psychological-biological shock from the experience of a conflict, and, without a definitive resolution and avoidance of all the corresponding associations of the conflict, no true healing can take place.

A Hamer’s lesion can only occur in the area of the brain that relates to the corresponding organ.

Whether the individual is right or left handed is important in recognising the nature of the relevant conflict. (See footnote i.) Thus, a lady who claps with a dominant right hand with cancer of the left breast has always experienced a concern-, dispute-, or separation-conflict with her own mother or child. If she has cancer of the right breast this always indicates that she has experienced a concern-, dispute-, or separation-conflict with her partner. In the case of a left-handed woman the opposite breast will be affected.

The discovery of the new medicine and the conclusions which can be drawn as a result do not, in any way, shape or form, guarantee us an eternal life, without pain, or for everyone to live without illness. But now we can understand why 80 to 90 % of wild animals spontaneously recover from illness, even from cancer.

Humans also used to recover in such numbers before the existence of chemotherapy, radical operations, radiation treatment, morphine and psychiatric drugs.

It is to be hoped that this wonderful discovery, so generously bequeathed to us by Dr Hamer, penetrates into the heads, hearts and minds of all humanity as quickly as possible. Then it can gradually be asserted amongst its stubborn opponents, and the largest beneficiaries of our so-called health service. Contrary to popular belief this last group does not serve the interest of the nation’s health. Rather their aim is the deliberate control of the population, while reaping the financial spoils. Attention is merely focused on keeping an individual fit for work for as long as possible. These are very harsh words, but arise logically as a by-product of the growing indubitability of the findings of the new medicine.

The “associative tracks”

The “associative tracks” are a form of mental association, firmly linked to the occurrence of a DHS. For example, a woman has for years parked her car in an underground garage during the day. One day she is violently attacked from behind and raped. At the precise moment of this trauma her organism takes a quasi “flash photograph” of all the attendant circumstances; the smell of petrol and diesel, the pollen, the luminosity, the humidity; everything that she perceived at the time of the DHS, will serve in the future as a warning signal. Whenever the woman comes across such light conditions, smells, pollen etc., she recreates the original trauma through association. The conflict is activated again within the psyche, the brain and the organs of her body. This shows that all allergies are nothing more than mental associations from a DHS.

It is hoped that the new medicine’s five laws of nature find their way as soon as possible into the medical and biological sciences, and into the awareness of the man on the street. However it is exactly such simple and commonsensical truths that are least accepted by people, particularly within highly respected professions and the branches of industry, who have been earning a good living from maintaining such fallacy. Therefore they will engage all their resources in repressing this new discovery, if necessary portraying it as a falsehood.

The price of freedom is to think for oneself and be responsible for oneself. The world-wide fear of doing so, partnered by constant brainwashing has led to the situation that since 1981 many millions of people have all too often had to succumb to a terrible, tormented, and biologically premature death.

All the scientific facts quoted above are the intellectual property of Dr. Hamer.

<sup>i</sup> The clap test is the only reliable way of ascertaining left or right handedness. The hand placed on top of the other is the dominant one. The clap test has nothing to do with dexterity, merely indicating the brain hemisphere in which the initial conflict strikes. With identical twins it is always the case that one is right, the other, left-handed. In accordance with biodiversity this serves the survival urge, as identical twins always complement one another.
